

“Israel, Hamas, and Pressure Strategies: A Shift in Approach”

written by Dr. Raphael BenLevi | 09.03.2025

Dr. Raphael Ben Levi: Hamas doesn't care about being killed or about deaths among Gaza's population, therefore threats to eliminate them are unlikely to lead it to surrender. We must pressure Hamas with something they do care about: controlling territory. Israel must begin annexing small portions of the Gaza Strip, with each day the hostages remain captive resulting in more permanent land lost. This might be pressure Hamas understands. Other measures should include withholding aid to Gaza entirely.

Eventually, however, there is no alternative path to victory than the IDF conquering Gaza and imposing military rule in the interim. Only then can we begin discussing local Arab self-rule, as any technocratic government installed without first eliminating Hamas would inevitably fall under its control.

Next Stage of War Will Be Shorter, 'Much More Intense,' and Will Topple Hamas

written by Prof. Kobi Michael | 09.03.2025

Prof. Kobi Michael: Trump has freed Israel of all of the reins and restrictions. Israel is being given all the legitimacy to conquer the whole of the Gaza Strip, impose military rule, and evacuate civilian population from there. Trump is willing to let Israel do this, taking into account the dire consequences for Gaza, while letting Israel use extensive amounts of force.

Israel and Hamas' end games can never be reconciled. "ven if Israel is willing to release an even greater number of Palestinian prisoners in exchange for more hostages and would agree to stop the war, it cannot accept the continued presence of Hamas in Gaza.

New army chief 'knows where the IDF needs to go'

written by Col. (res.) Dr. Hanan Shai | 09.03.2025

Col. (res.) Dr. Hanan Shai: Unlike others in recent decades, he is a graduate of a command training program that was founded after "Operation Peace for Galilee" [the First Lebanon War], under the sponsorship of Dan Shomron [the 13th IDF chief of staff]. This program was created as a response to the realization that the IDF's level of command professionalism was very low.

Zamir is the last officer who was trained under the original IDF doctrinal framework” and therefore has the knowledge and ability to lead the military back to a warfighting doctrine focused on the overarching goal of decisive victory. This, therefore, is his big advantage. He knows where the IDF needs to go, and more important, he knows how to get it there.

Trump administration's direct talks with Hamas break an old

written by Prof. Kobi Michael | 09.03.2025

Prof. Kobi Michael: “Any negotiation, mainly direct negotiation, provides Hamas with a broader layout or space of maneuver as well as legitimacy. Furthermore, it enables Hamas to manipulate and play between Israel and the U.S.”

Israel's Strategic Challenges and the Path Forward in Gaza

written by Prof. Kobi Michael | 09.03.2025

Prof. Kobi Michael: The conflict with Hamas is part of a broader regional war, involving Iran and the “resistance axis.” If Israel fails to achieve its goals in Gaza, it will face threats on other fronts, potentially widening the conflict. Israel is now positioned as a strong regional power, and it must act accordingly, particularly in dealing with Hamas. Although Europe and the UN may oppose further military action in Gaza, the U.S. remains a crucial ally. If Israel decides to resume military operations, international support will likely align with the U.S., and the war is expected to be shorter than the previous 15-month conflict.

Reorganizing the Region: A New Approach to Gaza and its Neighbors

written by Ruth Wasserman Lande | 09.03.2025

Ruth Wasserman Lande: As for Jordan, it is very fragile, with 70% Palestinians already living there, and there are already internal issues with the Palestinian population. “Do we need more Palestinians from Gaza to move to Jordan?” This would only create additional security challenges for Israel.

The solution I’m proposing, which might seem a bit off the radar, is Qatar. Qatar “has been funding and supporting Hamas” and has the infrastructure from the World Cup, the money, and land that is 30 times larger than Gaza. This could be a much better solution for the Palestinians in Gaza. “They would enjoy living in a more prosperous country like Qatar, rather than under Hamas rule in Gaza.”

I understand that Qatar would not gladly accept such a solution, and neither would Egypt or Jordan. The question is, “What leverage will the United States use to make this possibility a reality?”

Israel's Security Challenges: The Fight Against Hamas, Iran, and Regional Instability

written by Dr. Raphael BenLevi | 09.03.2025

Dr. Rafael BenLevi discusses the severity of recent attacks in Israel, emphasizing the necessity of IDF operations in Judea and Samaria as it serves as the main front in the current multi-front war. He questions the Palestinian Authority's ability to act as a stabilizing force, highlighting Israel's intervention in counterterrorism efforts.

Regarding Hamas, he warns that any arrangement allowing it to remain in power would be a strategic disaster for Israel and the broader Middle East, benefiting Islamist factions.

He is skeptical about Arab states stepping in to remove Hamas, stressing that Israel is the only actor capable of doing so. On Iran, he argues that only a credible military threat can halt its nuclear ambitions, as diplomatic negotiations are unlikely to yield real results.

He also discusses Hezbollah's grip on Lebanon, suggesting Israel's actions have shifted the regional balance of power. Regarding Syria, he acknowledges its ongoing instability and the need for Israel to safeguard its interests, expressing doubt that the regime has truly changed.

Israel's Role in Countering Iran: Strategy, Pressure, and Geopolitical Realities

written by Dr. Raphael BenLevi | 09.03.2025

Dr. Raphael Ben Levi: A new nuclear deal between Iran and the United States seems unlikely because the US will demand a true rollback of Iran's capabilities to ensure that it cannot develop a weapon, whereas Iran would only accept a deal that would leave open the possibility of attaining a weapon in the future while removing the economic pressure. Israel remains the only country willing to take direct action against Iran's nuclear ambitions. While the U.S., Europe, and even Russia oppose a nuclear Iran, none are prepared to intervene militarily. This places the burden on Israel, which must maintain a credible military threat.

Hamas' Inhumanity and Israel's Struggle for Justice

written by Ruth Wasserman Lande | 09.03.2025

Ruth Wasserman Lande: Hamas, a designated terrorist organization, profits from the bodies of the dead and kidnapped civilians. This is not just an Israeli or Jewish tragedy—it is a human tragedy, incomprehensible to anyone who values life, freedom, equality, and democracy. Israel sanctifies life and the duty of giving a proper burial to those murdered by its enemies. Yet, in exchange, Israel is forced to release not just prisoners, but convicted terrorists—murderers who have carried out attacks against civilians. These terrorists, some serving life sentences, will be released near Israel's borders—Gaza, Judea and Samaria, and East Jerusalem. It is surreal.

509 Days in Captivity: Israel's Fight Against Hamas

written by Ruth Wasserman Lande | 09.03.2025

Ruth Wasserman Lande: For 509 days, Hamas has held hostages in Gaza, with 63 still trapped in inhumane conditions. Today, Israel mourns the brutal murder of the Bibas babies and their mother, while their father, recently released after 500 days in captivity, returns to a devastating reality. The tragedy is not just Israeli or Jewish but a human one, exposing Hamas' true nature as a ruthless terrorist organization. They openly prepare for more war, exploiting ceasefires to regroup, rearm, and use humanitarian aid to further their goals. Hamas leaders have made it clear they will never disarm or abandon their fight, ensuring ongoing violence and radicalization.
