You can't make America great again by making it retreat again

written by Dr. David Wurmser | 03.02.2025

Dr. David Wurmser: t's actually what hasn't happened. There's no crisp definition of what MAGA is, going forward, and what we're seeing now is a battle over the soul of the movement. The term-turned-epithet "neoconservatism" became a kind of clarion call on the part of those who hated Israel, were antisemitic or classic leftists like "The Squad." It became a rubric, and the Iraq War became a symbol of how "evil" the neoconservatives were. Of course, the history of that war has been distorted. The people I was dealing with at the time had a very different vision of how it would progress from the way it's been depicted by detractors. It was much less a colonialist American vision than an Iraqi one. It was Colin Powell's vision to go in with 600,000 troops, and then it was Paul Bremer's idea to have a colonial presence in Iraq to rebuild the country. That was horrifying to many of us. We wanted Iraqis to do the heavy lifting of liberating their country; we wanted them to assume control as fast as possible. Our model was the Free French in World War II.

Published in JNS, February 03, 2025.

You can't make America great again by making it retreat again

Dr. David Wurmser JNS, 03.02.25